From Vegas to Fairbanks

C Adam Naglich was used to hot summers and mild winters when he began his hockey career. That is until he decided to play his college hockey at the University of Alaska, located in Fairbanks, AK. Naglich's hometown of Las Vegas is located over 3,200 miles south, and slightly east, of Fairbanks. Needless to say, the climate is a little bit warmer in Vegas.

"It's definitely cold," Naglich says. "When you go from over 100 degree weather in Las Vegas in the summer to minus 50 in Fairbanks in the winter, it's different."

To put things in perspective, Naglich said, "The average high in Fairbanks in the winter is around zero degrees. The cold days are minus 30 or minus 40." Compare that to the Average highs in Las Vegas during July and August of over 100 degrees, to say the weather is "different" is a bit of an understatement.

But how did Naglich end up over 3,000 miles from home to play hockey in sub-zero temperatures? "I had a lot of guys that I played juniors with in Victoria that were going to go to Fairbanks. It made my decision easy having a lot of teammates that were already committed to go there. I ended up choosing there as well."

The Alaska Aces hail from Anchorage, and while still in Alaska, they don't experience the same low temperature levels as Fairbanks. Anchorage is located approximately 350 miles south of Fairbanks. "I know Anchorage is a little bit warmer because it is on the coast," said Naglich. "But it is a different type of cold. It is a wet cold because it is on the water. They are both cold though; there is no getting away from it. It's Alaska in the winter."

With temperatures well below zero, it can be difficult to find ways to spend your time. Naglich wasn't able to provide much help in that regard. "When it is cold in the winter, there is nothing to do. You can't really go outside. But when it starts getting a little bit nicer, you can start to do things. A lot of the guys would go out and go snowmobiling and ice fishing."

Freezing temperatures all winter long can sound like pretty tough living conditions, but Naglich didn't mind them. He said, "I liked it, it was fun, but I don't know if I would ever want to go back and live there."

So was the overall experience worth it? "Yes," Naglich said. "I enjoyed my time there. I liked it a lot." The Aces don't seem to mind it either, as they bring one of the best records in the ECHL to Bakersfield tonight. With how cold it's been in Bakersfield lately, they might feel right at home.
