Action Figurines – You're never too old

Most of us had action figurines when we were young, and now thanks to the Condors everyone 5-and-older (that's right, this one is for the adults) get to add one more to our collection, which will most likely sit on a shelf in our den or office that we only take down to play with when our spouses or coworkers are gone.

The first "action figurine" was created by Hasbro in 1964, it was a military-themed toy made for boys who wouldn't play with dolls, they called him, G.I. Joe. A quick useless but interesting note, the original G.I. Joe prototype was sold in 2003 for $200,000. I recall having several G.I. Joes, but my favorite when I was young, my Thunder Cats action figure. Below is a list of the Condors favorite action figurines and funny memories of the toys from when they were young.

Bobby Bolt – "My favorite action figurine was my blue transformer, I don't remember what his name was it was a long time ago (Ultra Magnus). My mom took it away from me as a punishment for getting in trouble at school. I was shooting spit wads."

Mike Wirll – "Hulkamania, definitely (Hulk Hogan wrestling action figurine). That thing never left my side for sure. Where ever I went Hulkamania went with me. I would hide it in my backpack and take it to school. It was a big one too, like a foot tall I even had the wrestling ring and everything."

Matt Pope – "I had all four of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles. I remember my brothers and I were playing with them, we had the whole sewer base set that came with the Secret of the Ooze. I can't believe I remember that was the name. Anyway, you could buy the ooze and we were playing with it and got it all over couch and we got in trouble."

Tom Morrow – "I had a ton of action figures. I had Ghostbusters action figures, right after they came out and my mom accidentally sold it at a garage sale. That was a tough couple of weeks. I probably wouldn't have gotten through them without my Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles action figurines."
